Amy Tan is a young Chinese-American girl growing up in California. Her mother is poor and wants her daughter to be successful in their new country.

Every night after dinner, my mother and I would sit at the kitchen table. She would present new tests, taking her examples from stories of amazing children she had read in magazines she kept in a pile in our bathroom. My mother got these magazines from people whose houses she cleaned. And since she cleaned many houses each week, we had a great assortment.

The first night she brought out a story about a three-year-old boy who knew the capitals of all the states and even most of the European countries. A teacher was quoted as saying the little boy could also pronounce the names of the foreign cities correctly.

‘What’s the capital of Finland?’ my mother asked me, looking at the magazine story.

All I knew was the capital of California where we lived, because Sacramento was the name of the street we lived on in Chinatown. ‘Nairobi!’ I guessed, saying the most foreign word I could think of. She checked to see if that was one possible way to pronounce ‘Helsinki’ before showing me the answer.

The tests got harder – multiplying numbers in my head, finding the queen of hearts in a deck of cards, trying to stand on my head without using my hands, predicting the daily temperatures in Los Angeles, New York and London.

One night I had to look at a page from the Bible for three minutes and then report everything I could remember. ‘Now Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance and ... that’s all I remember, Ma,’ I said.

And seeing my mother’s disappointed face once again, something inside me began to die. I hated the tests, the raised hopes and failed expectations. Before going to bed that night, I looked in the mirror above the bathroom sink and when I saw only my face staring back – and that it would always be this ordinary face – I began to cry. Such a sad, ugly girl. I made high-pitched noises like a crazed animal, trying to scratch out the face in the mirror.

And then I saw what seemed to be another side of me – because I had never seen that face before. I looked at my reflection, blinking so I could see her more clearly. The girl staring back at me was angry, powerful. The girl and I were the same. I had new thoughts, wilful thoughts, or rather thoughts filled with lots of ‘won’ts’. I won’t let her change me, I promised myself. I won’t be what I’m not.

SECTION B: POETRY

Hedgehog

Twitching the leaves just where the drainpipe clogs
In ivy leaves and mud, a purposeful
Creature at night about its business. Dogs
Fear his stiff seriousness. He chews away

5 At beetles, worms, slugs, frogs. Can kill a hen
With one snap of his jaws, can taunt a snake
To death on muscled spines. Old countrymen
Tell tales of hedgehogs sucking a cow dry.

But this one, cramped by houses, fences, walls,
10 Must have slept here all winter in that heap
Of compost, or have inched by intervals
Through tidy gardens to this ivy bed.

And here, dim-eyed, but ears so sensitive
A voice within the house can make him freeze,
15 He scuffs the edge of danger; yet can live
Happily in our nights and absences.

A country creature, wary, quiet and shrewd,
He takes the milk we give him, when we’re gone.
At night, our slamming voices must seem crude
20 To one who sits and waits for silences.
